BUILDING A STRONGER WORKFORCE FOR NORTH CAROLINA

The North Carolina Association of Workforce Development Boards (NCAWDB) is the voice for workforce development in North Carolina. Comprised of 22 local workforce boards with over 500 members, the Association is dedicated to enhancing North Carolina's workforce by supporting local workforce development boards statewide. Association members are led by private sector businesses and employers, which make up over 51% of the membership. These local workforce development boards, along with partners through NCWorks, help advance the needs of workers and employers in North Carolina.

NC Workforce Development Boards

- Help businesses identify and obtain talented individuals they need to sustain or grow their workforce.
- Provide information and data to education stakeholders about available jobs that are in demand and corresponding wages to ensure relevant training and services are provided to students
- Provide career information and guidance, access to training and education, and job search assistance to help individuals reach their career goals
- Partner with education, industry, and economic development to increase awareness about regional careers and develop Career Pathways that educate people on the skills and credentials they need to get those jobs

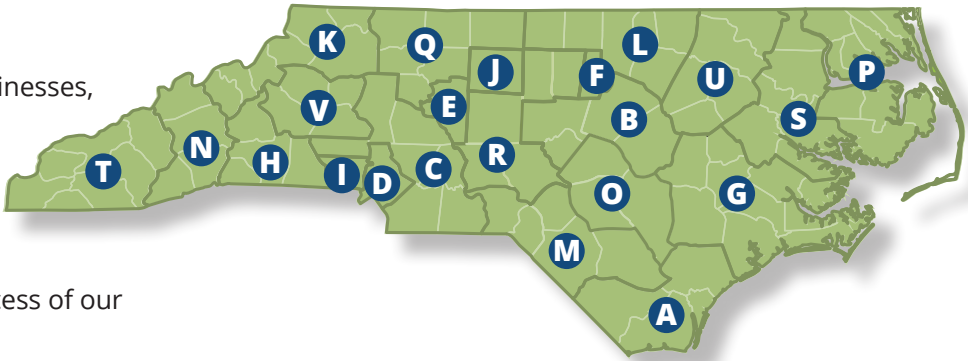

Board chairs and members, along with executive directors of each workforce board form the membership of the N.C. Association of Workforce Development Boards (NCAWDB). Every day, we help people and businesses across North Carolina gain access to programs and services that make our workforce one of the most skilled, productive and motivated in the nation.

Learning by experience. Winning by sharing.

We exchange best practices and share successes so more businesses and workers can take advantage of the services we help provide. We work to increase public awareness and recognition of all boards, and provide our members with access to real-time information in order for boards to be successful.

Experience matters

We bring real-world experience in growing businesses, managing organizations and championing people. In manufacturing, information systems, communications, healthcare and many other vital industries, we understand what it takes to sustain and accelerate the success of our businesses and our communities.
